THE HAUL THIS TIME A VERY SLIGHT ONE.

The usual Daily Story Comes This Time From Grand-Rapids East Tennessee Train Assailed—Only 465 Secured—Blood-Boils in Persecution.

BORE, Ga., Dec. 3.—The south-bound No. 1, which left here about 11:30 last night, was boarded by two masked men at the crossing about three miles south of the town. The men jumped onto the rear end of the baggage car and locked the forward door closed.

After the train started they entered the baggage car, and covering the express messenger and baggage master with their revolvers, secured the keys to the safe, which they plundered.

The express company's agents say the robbers secured but $65.

Most of the officers and citizens with blood hounds are on their trail. It is thought the robbers were railroad men.

A DOLLAR A TON.

A Newly Invented Coal Fuel Cheap.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—Albort Edman, an inventor, claims to have discovered a process for making coal out of lignite, at a cost of about $1.

In 1860 he first turned his attention to the discovery of cheaper coal, and since then he has devoted all his time and money to this purpose.

He well knows fact that there exists upon the surface of the globe a large quantity of what may be termed inferior coal, which is commonly called lignite.

In other words, the inventor believes that by the mixture of lignite with certain other elements a product is produced which is as perfect as any that was ever mined, and this lignite, he claims, would require a thousand years for its transformation into perfect coal.

FOR A NINE HOUR DAY

AN ADDRESS BY THE CARPENTERS AND JOINERS' UNION.

A Nine Hour Day Better for All Concerned. No Antagonism Toward Contractors. Workmen Their Own Evils. An Appeal for United Action.

THE SECRETARY OF THE CARPENTERS' UNION HAS ISSUED THE FOLLOWING ADDRESS:

IT HAS NOW become an open secret and may well be made public that a desperate effort will be made next spring by the carpenters and joiners of this city to establish a nine-hour day, and it is believed that with proper management such an attempt must be attended with success.

WE HAVE a good class of mechanics as well as a good class of contractors, and as much building upon the average as any city of the same population, and we have a class of contractors who do not excel in their generosity of spirit to those of our sister cities.

LET US examine those things and see what questions are to be solved and who is responsible for the existing conditions.

FIRST—It is necessary that all men or firms who are engaged in the building business should be treated alike.

IT IS necessary that carpenters now working on a contract should be treated as contractors would work on an even footing, and could just as well figure on their own terms.

WE MUST either do so, or we must form a combine among the journeymen, and refuse to work for any contractor who will not work on an even footing by refusing to work for any of them for more than a definite number of hours.

The striking miners of France have been conciliated and resumed work. They have been assured that the superintendents shall give them better treatment and their leaders shall not be discharged. They are to be paid for the time and wages of hours of work. The end of the strike is the result of a compromise enforced by the authorities in France on both sides. This is the first time that the miners in this contest between capital and labor. If this was the rule in this country the prolonged, bitter and harmful strikes that frequently occur would be a thing of the past. The strikes on the Central, the Wash line and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, as also the strikes in the coal mining and coke burning regions, should have ended with fairness to both sides through the dignified and all powerful interference of the state or national government.

It is rumored that Mills is a free trader, Springer, a tariff reformer and Crisp a protectionist, and yet Senator Carlisle tells us the Democratic party is all on the tariff question.

NEW CANADIAN CANAL. Waterway to be Constructed to Avoid the Rideau Rapids.

OTAWA, Ont., Dec. 3.—The Dominion government has decided to construct a new canal on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, about forty miles above Montreal, in order to avoid the Rideau rapids. The intended canal, $4,250,000. Tenders will be invited in a few days. With the completion of the new St. Lawrence canal and the construction of the Cascades canal, Canada will possess an independent waterway from the head of Lake Superior to the seaboard. In undertaking these works the Dominion government is simply carrying out the policy of the late Sir John Macdonald, the great builder of the empire of the great St. Lawrence route. The volume of American grain shipped from Chicago to the Canadian coast is increasing yearly.

BOLD TEXAS KIDNAPERS.

Prominent Texas Man Taken From His Buggy and Sprung Alive. DALLAS, Dec. 3.—Last night at 11 o'clock, while H. J. They lifted him from the buggy. They then compelled the occupants of the carriage to drive on. The air reported to the police, but no arrests have been made. The object of the kidnapping is a mystery.

Antelope and "Tunk" Leads.

I was sitting in a passenger car looking out over a stretch of prairie land in the great West. I noticed a tunk leading a party of antelopes. The antelope was evidently, indeed, a ship captain who had not met me. It was "half a gal," and was leading a party of antelopes. I was struck by the fact that the antelope was leading a party of antelopes. I was struck by the fact that the antelope was leading a party of antelopes.

Not one of our party could imagine what these were, never having heard of anything of the kind. We watched the antelope leading the party of antelopes and the wind left the antelopes and the pursuing balls far behind us. To increase our interest, however, instead of antelopes being seen on the windward side of the track, piled up against the wire fences and in ravines and gulches were several tunks.

I afterward learned that what our party saw were known to the plainsmen as "tunks" and to botanists as the Cycloloma phyllophyllo. It belongs to a genus of plants that grow in a thick, globe shaped mass of twigs and small branches. These are attached to a small stem, which in fall becomes dry and brittle, and, as the autumn winds blow off at the stubble, these stems break off and the tunks begin to lead away, scattering their seeds as they go. Antelopes and jack rabbits, grouse and prairie dogs are attracted to the tunks, and stamped and the roadsides clogged by these flying masses of brushwood.—St. Nicholas.

Language of Elephants. The language of the elephant is well understood by the East Indians and those who have to do with the large animals as if the communication was made in their own tongue, though, curiously, in the sounds in India and Ceylon have different meanings imputed to them. We arranged the trunk utterances in a shrill cry through the trunk, which may be taken as a warning. A responsible elephant in hunting elephants had approached a large tusker when he found, to his chagrin, that he could not drop his ammunition, so that he could only be concealed and feast his eyes upon the huge animal. His disappointment was partly compensated by observing the large tusker uttering the rest that danger was lurking in the air. Communication was made in the following way: The tusker was feeding and moved slowly around until he suddenly came below the concealed sportsman, when he uttered a low, rumbling sound, which he recognized the presence of an enemy. He stopped feeding, raised the tip of his trunk, and, penetrating his nostrils with his lips the word "pruh" repeating it so that it sounded something like "pruh-pruh-pruh." He uttered this sound hardly has been noticed had not the sportsman been near at hand, but it was immediately understood by the herd, which moved quickly but silently away, followed by the sentinel.—St. Paul Dispatch.

Shopping in Europe.

An American woman, an acquaintance went into a Carlsbad shop a few days ago to buy a hand mirror with silver back and amethyst settings, which she had seen displayed in the window. With checks added and eyes gleaming to check the coveted mirror, she asked the price and was told that the aforementioned article was held at 350 francs. She was rather abashed and began to bargain for the price and was told that the aforementioned article was held at 350 francs. She was rather abashed and began to bargain for the price and was told that the aforementioned article was held at 350 francs.

"You are joking, aren't you? You certainly do not ask 300 francs for a thing like a hand mirror, but I will let you have it for 150." "Impossible." "Guten tag."

"Take it along." The American woman with the Connecticut accent was enabled to acquire for 125 francs what she would really have paid 300 for. Her manner on going into the shop betrayed her being a purchase at any price. So, gentle reader, when you enter a European jewelry shop buy a coveted article, do not shy off, like Jewellers Review.

Going to Give Pennies Hereafter. The papers are always printing pieces about women who pay their street car fare in pennies, greatly to the fatigue and disgust of the conductors. Men are supposed to get rid of small change for cigars, but women have no such way of disposing of their cents, they accumulate on their hands and are very handy to use for car fare. The conductor is not expected to change a bill larger than two dollars, and sometimes it is a case of pay cents or go about. However, for long time—being a reasonably accommodating sort of person—I refrained from offering a conductor pennies if I could possibly spare up a nickel or a dime or a quarter.

The other evening when riding in the car I opened my pocketbook and found it fairly brimming up and running over with pennies. I was in a bad way, and I was looking for a way to get rid of them. I was looking for a way to get rid of them. I was looking for a way to get rid of them.

A Pioneer Business Woman. To the courtesy of Miss Mary Seymour, the able editor of The Woman's Journal, I am indebted for a delicious bit of colonial legendary lore which she has kindly loaned to me. It is copied from the archives of the old town of Providence. "Mrs. Freelove Crawford, daughter of Arthur Fenner and wife of Gideon Crawford, continued the mercantile adventures of her husband for several years after his death, which occurred in 1707. She appears to have displayed much energy of spirit and business sagacity augmented the family estate. Her wealth at the time of her death in 1712 was valued at sixty-three thousand pounds, she had a gold watch, a pair of diamonds, high heeled shoes, an armband, a side saddle, a silver tankard, two pair of ribbons, seven spoons and saltcellars, and also one white cup (all of silver), two pair of fashers, twelve pounds (sixty dollars), and besides several sorts of silken goods."

This Puritan pioneer in business not often carried on by women belonged to the type of New England woman whose descendants are now leading the van of pioneer business women of the west, the east and the whole country. A Natty Travelling Costume. The traveling costume of a young widow who boarded a train at Bay City the other day was very Frenchy. A skirt and tight fitting long coat of dark blue gray brilliant material, a long, close fitting cap covered with the same material and a long veil pinned on in close folds and long blue gaiters. The veil matched the cap and was slightly finer in texture to hang in softer folds. Gloves and overgaiters were of the gray brilliant material, unusual and, in this case, vastly becoming costume.—New York Letter.

Parental Sacrifice. The singular exhibition of parental sacrifice is said to have occurred in Mobile a few days ago: A mother was standing on the gallery of her home with her baby when the latter fell to the floor. The distance to the ground is twenty feet, but the mother, without an instant's hesitation, sprang after the child and both fell to the ground, most the same instant. The baby, striking the mother's body, escaped with only a few bruises, but the mother had her hip dislocated. Otherwise she was not injured.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Stewed or Starved.

A recent dispatch from London says: For years past the work people of Lancashire have complained bitterly of excessive steaming in the weaving sheds, and efforts have been repeatedly but vainly made to stop a stop to the practice.

The Lancashire work people have been steadily increasing in number, and the trade could not be carried on profitably without it. Encouraged by promises of support from several large trade unions, the weavers have now resolved to abstain from work on the day without delay, at the cost, if necessary, of a general strike in the trade.

Three thousand weavers met the other night in the Blackburn exchange under the presidency of John Mandesley, a member of the Lancashire work people's union, and passed resolutions calling for the total abolition of steaming. The speakers told harrowing tales of the horrors of the trade, and a proposition emanated by the secretary of the Blackburn Operatives' society that "it was better to be starved than stewed to death" was enthusiastically cheered.

The Type Sticker on Top. Typesetting machines again come to notice through the contest of the inventors in Chicago. It is the latest one of two of the machines set out about twice as much type as one average typesetter would, but some of the other inventions are not so good.

The International Typographical union in its true conviction in Boston, adopted a report on the subject, with recommendations tending to regulate the use of the machines, as well as the part of the union men operating them. The utility of the machinery appears to be applicable to typesetting of a routine character, leaving hand work a necessity for special or artistic printing.

A Philadelphia newspaper is said to be the possessor of seven machines, on which experiments are being made—Philadelphia Ledger.
