THE ACQUISITION OF CUBA. The political and commercial connection between Cuba and the United States is of great importance, and cannot be safely overlooked in the calculations of our policy.

So highly did the Government value the political connection between Cuba and the United States, that John Quincy Adams, in 1823, while Secretary of State, said in his instructions to Mr. Nelson, then Minister to Madrid, that the island was necessary, even to preserve the Union.

Mr. Everett, in a confidential dispatch to the Secretary of State, in 1827, said he had informed the Spanish Minister of State, "that it was with the United States a settled principle that the island (Cuba) must in no event pass into the possession or under the protection of any European Power other than Spain."

Mr. Van Buren, in 1829, in his instructions to Mr. Van Ness, said:

"The Government of the United States has always looked with the deepest interest upon the fate of those islands, but particularly of Cuba. Its geographical position, which places it almost within sight of our shores, and, as it were, gives it the command of the Gulf of Mexico, and the West India sea, its safe and spacious harbors, its rich productions, the exchange of which, for our surplus agricultural products and manufactures, constitutes the main source of our wealth, and the main support of our foreign trade, render it of the utmost importance to the United States that no change should take place in its control which might injuriously affect our political and commercial standing in that quarter."

Mr. Stevens, in 1837, in his letter to Mr. Forsyth, said that, in a confidential conversation with Lord Palmerston, he had reminded him of the declaration of our Minister to the French Government, in 1826, "that the United States could not see with indifference Porto Rico and Cuba pass from Spain into the possession of any other power."

Mr. M. Mr. Forsyth, then Secretary of State instructed Mr. Vall, our Minister to Spain, in these words:

"The United States have long looked with no slight degree of solicitude to the political condition of the island of Cuba, and with no less anxiety to our shores, the extent of its commerce with us, and the similarity of its domestic institutions with those prevailing in portions of our own country, combine to lead us to regard it as a country which we should look upon with indifference upon any occurrence connected with the fate of that island. The Spanish Government, which has been apprised of the wishes of the United States, that no other than Spanish domination should be exercised over it, and that no other than our policy, in that respect, has undergone no change."

In the same dispatch he says, in relation to the occupation of Cuba by Great Britain, in either of the two modes which he suggested, as likely to be resorted to by the latter Power:

"Whether attempted to be brought about by one or the other of the means alluded to, or by any other process, the United States never permit it. The Spanish Government is to bear in mind this fixed resolution on our part, and be given to understand that it is taken upon long and mature deliberation, and in all cases, to govern the conduct of the United States."

Again, he says upon this subject: "Should you have reason to suspect any design on the part of Spain, to transfer voluntarily her title to the island whether of ownership, or possession, and whether permanent or temporary, to Great Britain or any other Power, you will distinctly state that the United States will prevent it at all hazards, as they will any military occupation for any pretext whatsoever."

Mr. Webster, in a confidential dispatch to General Campbell, United States Consul at Havana, in 1838, said: "The Spanish Government has long been in possession of the policy and wishes of this Government in regard to Cuba, which have never changed, and has been repeatedly told that the United States never would consent to the occupation of that island by British agents or forces upon any pretext whatsoever."

Mr. Irving, said: "In the event that Spain shall so far yield to the pressure upon her, as to concede to Great Britain any control over Cuba, the fact will necessarily have an important influence upon the policy of this Government."

Mr. Buchanan, in 1848, in his instructions to Mr. Saunders, thus defined the position of the United States in respect to Cuba:

"We can never consent that this island should become a colony any other European Power. In the possession of Great Britain of any strong naval Power, I might prove ruinous both to our domestic and foreign commerce, and even endanger the Union of the States. The highest and first duty of every independent nation is to provide for its own safety, and acting upon this principle, we should be compelled to resist the acquisition of Cuba by any powerful maritime State, with all the means which Providence has placed at our command."

Mr. Marcy, the late Secretary of State, in his instructions to Mr. Buchanan, in 1853, said: "For many reasons, the United States feel deeply interested in the case of Cuba. They will never consent to its transfer to either of the intervening nations, or to any other foreign State. They would regard it as an insult to our national honor, and as a challenge to our own Powers to interfere to sustain Spanish rule in the island, should it prove resistance too formidable to be overcome by Spain herself."

To Mr. Seale, he says: "While the United States would resist, at every hazard, the transference of Cuba to any European nation, they would exceedingly prefer to see Spain resorting to any Power for assistance to uphold her rule over it. Such a dependence on foreign aid would, in effect, in the auxiliary with the character of a protector, and give it a pretext to interfere in our affairs, and also generally in those of the North American continent. In case of such a transfer to the United States, such protecting Power would be in a condition to make nearly the same use of the island to annoy us as it could if it were the absolute possession of Spain."

I will only add the testimony of Mr. Jefferson. In a letter to Mr. Monroe, dated 24th of October, 1823, he says: "I candidly confess, I have ever looked on Cuba as the most important addition which could ever be made to our system of States. The control which, with the Florida point, this island would give us, would be the chief of our commerce, and the countries and isthmus bordering on it, as well as those whose waters flow into it, would fill up the measure of our political well-being."

Thus have the efforts of successive Administrations and the resources of diplomacy concerted to illustrate the political importance of the acquisition of Cuba.

A LYNCHER TRIED. Samuel Shalby, one of the parties indicted for the murder by lynching of Boyd Williams, some months ago—who was on trial at Iowa City last week, has been pronounced guilty of murder in the second degree. The Court will probably be taken up to the Supreme Court on a bill of exceptions.
