THE TIMELY WITNESS.

At the close of a cold winter's day in the year 1814, during the court term at Clerkenwell, London, England, there came up by the evening mail stage an ordinary looking person who hailed at a small tavern in the town of B—, where the trials were being heard, and who informed the landlord that he had arrived from the following day, if the weather was not too bad.

He looked himself "Henry Edgford of Leeds," and he was duly bestowed, and nothing out of the common appearance indicated itself in his manner or habits. He spoke pleasantly with the coming and the established guests of the house, and as the weather seemed good and forbidding in the morning, he thought that it might have been foretold on the evening he arrived, by the way, he decided to remain over another day.

Among the cases which had been presented by the grand jury of the borough, at the present sitting of the court, was one for robbery, charged upon a man who answered to the name of Burrows, and whose trial had commenced on the day of Edgford's arrival. Thus appeared to hang head down over the new comers' hands, and he seemed anxious to proceed on his journey; but the weather would not permit, and he had himself "reluctantly compelled" to tarry at B—. His landlord, desirous to amuse him and retain his visitor as long as possible, informed him that the town was full of amusement, and that he might ordinarily for the entertainment of strangers; and especially those who were here in and acquainted with the court, that the trial was in session, and among the presentations was the case of one John Burrows, who was being tried for a robbery on the highway, the details of which would do but little interest him for the moment. But the attorney who acted for the nervous, and did not care to attend court.

The subject was freely discussed at the table, breakfast and lunch hours, and the trial of Edgford was indeed at last to be commenced to listen to the closing evidence upon the capital trial which had so deeply interested every one in the neighborhood, and which was really a case of importance and note.

In the main time these recollections of the trial of "Henry Edgford of Leeds" were forwarded daily by the post from London; and Mr. E. had spoken of one or two of his correspondents, exactly, who had been recognized by the public whose he was temporarily journeying. He had a heavy letter of evidence from "Frank" (as he called himself), from Thomas Baring, and everything about the department and carriage of Mr. Henry Edgford, denoted him the distinguished gentleman.

The case of Burrows, who was charged with the high crime intended, was in this wise, as set forth in the allegation: "On the night of June 16, 1814, the Hon. Jonas Peck, M. P., was on his way home in his penny coach, when his animal was suddenly seized by a man, who sprang from a dark row near the crossing of the Charing and Barnard roads, who presented a pistol against the head of the coachman, Mr. P., and demanded his money or his life." It was near the setting of the moon, and the only one to catch up the back of his hand, which the honorable gentleman observed at the time the pistol was drawn upon him.

He had only four minutes about him at the time, and a ten pound note upon the Bank of England. The latter was not discovered by the robber, but the four gold coins were taken. He immediately an alarm was given by the honorable gentleman. Scouts and policemen were sent out and three or four minutes afterwards he was captured in a neighboring town, and confined on suspicion. No gold was found upon him.

I engaged you to carry my bag to the hotel, but you do not return it, and I do not remember your name and features." "At what time was this?" "About the middle of June." "Can you state the precise date of your arrival there?" "No, I think it was on the 15th or 16th of the month." Then turning to the court, the witness added: "I cannot clear your honor, as to the exact day; but if your honor will allow me to send my bag to the hotel, where I am temporarily stopping here, I can bring my memorandum book, which will assist me, your honor's permitting it."

The lawyer was given at once, and in a few minutes a small trunk was brought into court from the witness's room at the little hotel. Upon opening the trunk, the diary was found, and the witness turned to the following "item": "Mon.—Paid porter for carrying luggage to lodgings in Althow, half a crown. Arrived at 7 1/2 p. m."

The judges now asked again: "And do you state that this prisoner was the identical person who did this for you, Mr. Edgford, at that time?" "I am perfectly clear, your honor, in this regard."

"I paid him a half-crown piece, your honor, which had an unusually large hole in it; and I remember a remark that he made about the hole in the hole, which he made alluding to its lightness from this cause."

Mr. Edgford sat down, and the prisoner or witness asked that the officer that he might be called for a moment, who was subsequently required to produce the contents of the prisoner's pocket, found on him when taken. Among the small amount of silver thus secured was a mutilated half-crown piece, which was shown to Mr. Edgford, who instantly declared it to be his own had paid to the porter, to the best of his belief!

This admitted verdict caused the crowd applauded, the judge sat down in amazement; the cause went to the jury; and the result was an unqualified acquittal on their part, without leaving the boy.

That same evening "Henry Edgford, Esq.," and John Burrows held the torn of B— together, and both were so confounded in their friend and companion in evil assumed the disguise of a gentleman traveler, and being aware of the circumstances of the case from the story adapted to the moment and the imminent emergency of his associate. His letters were forgotten, and his wife, who was in the city, learned what coins were found upon Burrows when he was arrested, and his determination to clear him up, if successful, was such that there was no time or opportunity for rebutting the testimony of Edgford; his whole plan was a copy of a letter, and to his confederate in crime, he proceeded unhesitatingly, and with a united witness.

"I have you ever before seen me, to your knowledge?" "I am quite sure I have." "Will you inquire the court your name and business?" "My name is Henry Edgford, of Leeds, and I am a manufacturer of calicoes."

SEMI-WEEKLY PRESS

Kent County Agricultural Society. The first meeting of the Executive Board of the Kent Co. Agricultural Society for the current year, was held in the office of the Secretary, on Monday the 14th inst.

There was a full attendance and harmonious action. The following amendments to the by-laws, submitted at a previous meeting of the Board, were adopted, viz:

Resolved, That individuals offering ballots at the annual election of the Society, may be required to exhibit their certificates of membership when they offer their ballots, and that a refusal to do so shall exclude them from the right of suffrage.

Mr. Gracie, who has been selling life memberships, reported 33 sold since the last meeting of the Board, making in all 61 sold.

It was voted that the inhabitants of Grand Rapids and vicinity be invited to unite with the friends of the Society, in celebrating the centenary of the building of the first fair ground, and that on the 5th of the Society will hold a grand horse exhibition on the fair, the avails to be applied in erecting buildings on the ground.

A Committee was appointed to correspond with other societies in reference to the introduction of Grand River plaster into their respective localities, and to make general reports.

It was decided in concluding the abstract of the proceedings of the Board, that the prospects of the Society were never more encouraged than at the present time. Under the superintendence of our worthy and most efficient President, the improvements upon the fair ground are steadily progressing, and when completed according to the design now contemplated, will make them superior to any in the State.

The death of Charles Phillips, the eminent Irish barrister, says the Boston Journal, which took place in London on the 1st of December, seems to have been almost overlooked by the press.

Mr. Phillips enjoyed high reputation in his day as an orator and eminent advocate, and was extensively known to the literary world as the author of that very entertaining and original comedy, "Cuman".

From day to day her friends have striven to rally her strength, but without success until Wednesday last, when it became evident that she would be able to attend to her duties the next day. Although importuned to do so, Mr. Sickles has, from the first to the last, kindly and respectfully refused to grant her a respite.

On Wednesday evening Miss Laura was taken to the jail to see her father, and an illness less of the child than that gloomy place was very touching indeed, but not more so than the death of her father, and the grief which she bore.

The Gettysburg (Pa.) Compiler gives an account of the loss of a little boy, four years of age, a son of Mr. Carter, of a neighborhood started out on the search, scouring the surrounding mountains through the day and displaying a leaden forehead.

Death of Hon. Mike Walsh. The body of Hon. Mike Walsh, ex-Member of Congress from this county, was found morning in the area of a building in the Eight Avenue. He had been robbed and murdered. Another account says he was found dead in the foot of a building, and was broken, supposed to have fallen while in a state of intoxication.

Depature of Mrs. Sickles from Washington. From the Washington Post, March 11. Mrs. Sickles left for New York in the train yesterday. She was accompanied by her mother, Madame Bagdon, and two gentlemen, one of whom she has just returned, who had been delayed by her inability to leave her room, in which, ever since the sad event has occurred, she has confined herself.

From day to day her friends have striven to rally her strength, but without success until Wednesday last, when it became evident that she would be able to attend to her duties the next day. Although importuned to do so, Mr. Sickles has, from the first to the last, kindly and respectfully refused to grant her a respite.

THE PRESIDENT is still inclined to call an extra session, though he is opposed by most of the members of the Cabinet, and especially Mr. Thompson. He told Senator Gwin recently that a proclamation would be issued calling the Congress to meet on the 22d of August.

SUNDAY IN FOREIGN TERMS.

The Court folded in the village of New England committed on Saturday afternoon. No labor was performed on the evening which preceded the Lord's Day; early on Sunday morning the blowing of a horn in some places announced that the hour of worship was at hand.

The public religious services usually commenced at nine in the morning, and occupied from six to eight hours, divided by an intermission of one hour for dinner.

On motion, the matter of the drainage of the City of Grand Rapids, was referred to the Recorder, with instructions to frame an ordinance relative thereto.
